Dawnbringer is the silver sword of Ryvlyn of Sanzode, originally the typical sword of any member of the School of the Griffin. One of his prized weapons, it has been enhanced and tampered over the years to become an even more powerful blade to hunt down monsters and rogues.

History

"Here. Take this, at least. These are some of the best swords we have, and I don't think anyone else will be using them in the future."
—Keldar

The sword Dawnbringer originally an ordinary silver blade from the School of the Griffin, one the better-crafted ones for skilled witchers. However, when Kaer Seren was destroyed, the weapons were left with few to use them. Ryvlyn of Sanzode, who vowed to hunt down the mages that destroyed his home, was given the sword for his journey.

Ryvlyn would use the blade for many years, and eventually gave it the name Dawnbringer. He eventually would commission his gnome friend Sadrick to enhance the blade, and when returned the he found several runes and markings carved into the blade, enhancing its magical prowess. He continues to use the sword in his monster-hunting adventures.

Characteristics

The sword is designed like most silver witcher swords, simple but effective. A leather pommel with two roaring griffin heads for hilts, a pure silver blade that extends far out. Further forging has tampered the blade and Sadrick carved several runes on the blades flat sides, while ensuring it remained sharp and strong.

The sword has been magically enhanced to stay strong and not break as easily. The runes on its face and numerous enchantments cause the sword to be extremely effective against certain monsters, especially when combined with its silver ingredients.
